

FORENSIC PSYCHIATRY RESEARCH & INNOVATIONS AWARD PROGRAM

DESCRIPTION:

Forensic Psychiatry Research Poster Presentation Award

Financial award presented to the successful interdisciplinary team member in the SJHH forensic psychiatry program, who develops a poster presentation reflecting a research project aimed at improving clinical outcomes for patients in the forensic mental health system. The successful award recipient will demonstrate high quality and innovative research, contributing to new knowledge in the field of forensic mental health. The poster presentation will clearly outline key research components, be well organized, clearly written and visually appealing. The poster presentation will be displayed during the annual Radical Collaborations Research Day and/or at the annual Risk & Recovery Forensic Conference.

McMaster Psychiatry Resident's Travel Bursary Award

Financial award presented to a McMaster Psychiatry Resident in the SJHH forensic psychiatry program, who intends to attend the annual Canadian Academy of Psychiatry and the Law Conference taking place in February/March. Attendance at the conference is intended to increase Resident's knowledge in the field of forensic psychiatry. The award will support costs associated with tuition, travel and accommodation. The applicant is required to submit in writing his/her interest in Forensic Psychiatry, and learning goals, demonstrating how knowledge gained from conference participation will inform his/her interventions to improve clinical outcomes with patients in the forensic mental health system. The written proposal will be well organized, and reflect writing that is clear and succinct. The successful recipient will deliver a formal presentation to team members within the forensic psychiatry program in an effort to disseminate knowledge regarding effective interventions.

Forensic Psychiatry Research Award for Trainees

Financial award presented to a trainee affiliated with SJHH, McMaster University or Mohawk College in the SJHH forensic psychiatry program, toward costs associated with the completion of a research project aimed at improving clinical outcomes for patients in the forensic mental health system. The applicant is required to submit in writing an outline of his/her planned research project, clearly describing the following: defined project scope, question to be investigated, ethics board approval, data collection methods, data analysis, budget, timeline, and dissemination of results. The successful award recipient will demonstrate the following: value of the research in contributing to new knowledge in the field of forensic psychiatry; research that reflects original, innovative work, of high quality based on standard research protocols and ethical guidelines; research that reflects collaboration among interdisciplinary team members; a written submission that reflects superior writing ability, and innovative thinking that will contribute to leading best practices in the field of forensic psychiatry. The successful award recipient will disseminate new knowledge gained from research findings through a formal presentation to team members within the forensic psychiatry program, in an effort to share learnings regarding effective interventions that improve clinical outcome for this patient population.

Forensic Psychiatry Conference Travel Bursary

Financial award presented to interdisciplinary team member in the SJHH forensic psychiatry program, who intends to attend a conference, in order to increase knowledge in the field of forensic psychiatry. The award will support costs associated with tuition, travel and accommodation. Applicant is required to submit in writing his/her interests, demonstrating how knowledge gained from conference participation will inform his/her interventions with patients in the forensic mental health system to improve clinical outcomes. Knowledge gained from conference participation needs to be aligned with the applicant's learning and professional development goals. The successful award recipient will disseminate new knowledge gained from research findings through a formal presentation to team members within the forensic psychiatry program, in an effort to share learnings regarding effective interventions that improve clinical outcome for this patient population.
